INTRODUCTION

This catalogue of the small collection of taped radio broadcasts held by the Television & Radio Department at Michigan State University has been designed and compiled by Roger Skolnik, who at the time of its initial preparation was a graduate student in the department

Mr. Skolnik has designed the catalogue for expansion. He has also incorporated features intended to make it, like the collection it catalogues, useful primarily to the Television & Radio Department. This point perhaps needs underscoring. Though the catalogue may be expected to have some limited distribution, its purpose is to be descriptive only, and in no sense to offer for sale, or even for exchange, any of the programs listed. It could hardly be otherwise, in view of all the delicate problems of copyrights and other rights known to every collector in the field.

This is not to say that Michigan State University is in all cases unable to provide copies of these programs. Many of them have been acquired from other collections, and if not available for various reasons from Michigan State may be available from others. Often such acquisitions have been on an exchange basis; without some freedom of exchange, most collections would be smaller than they are. Obviously it is our hope that such exchanges continue, if only so that this collection may grow. It is to say, however, with what regret may be imagined, that restrictions prevent our duplicating some of the programs. In some cases, as a condition of acquisition, we have had to promise not to duplicate or to permit duplication in any form. In others, we do not know what rights or restrictions might be involved, and consequently cannot take the risk of duplication. (In some of these cases, we do not even know the ultimate source of our recording.) In still others ("The Investigator" is a good example), we assume that, because our immediate source is a commercially available recording, we are unlikely to be held responsible for infringement on someone's rights, even though the commercial recording may have been unauthorized. But the operative word here is "unlikely"; we simply do not know. Finally, in a great many cases there appears to be no problem in permitting reproduction for private or classroom use, or in general for most uses not for broadcast or not for profit. (A very few of these programs are available for broadcast under certain conditions; we must however refer any inquiries about them to the sources from which we acquired them.) Some programs we have recorded off the air.

- - - - -

The collection, now (1965) including some 130 hours of broadcast material, has been in the making since 1960, and has been made possible partly by a series of small Michigan State All-University Research grants, with the project title "Selected Recorded Collection of Radio Broadcasts 1920-1950". The project title tells the story. Our primary purpose has been to collect representative "classics" of the great days of radio -- with, it must be admitted, a tolerably generous interpretation of both "representative" and "classics". Reasons for inclusion of such more recent broadcasts as the Chase and Sanborn anniversary programs are obvious. And broadcasts like the various Kennedy assassination coverages will clearly become classics.

INTRODUCTION 2

Michigan State University uses these tapes for three main purposes: for courses, for research, and for general cultural "enrichment". Our courses in the Introduction to Broadcasting, in Programming, and in Broadcast Criticism use them heavily; courses like advanced Radio Production and Broadcast News to a lesser extent. One M.A. thesis based on the collection has already been completed; others are expected. The Television & Radio Department's "Radio Encores" series plays back selected recordings to all-university audiences in much the same way classic films are presented, and for the same purposes.

The nature and uses of the collection obviously distinguish it from some (but surely not most) others. The Stanford collection, for example, emphasizes music. The huge University of Washington collection is almost entirely World War II news. Michigan State has neither the intention nor (at present) the means for building an archive -- though naturally it is grateful for those specialized archives that exist, and hopes that such more ambitious archives as that proposed by NAB under Ted Malone will actually come into being. Such archives as Michigan State's own National Voice Library (the source, by the way, of some of these programs), while only incidentally interested in radio, includes some broadcasts or portions of them.

The fact that the broadcast industry has so far not managed to preserve its own history in any useful way, and the fact that there have come into being dozens, maybe hundreds, of small institutional collections like Michigan State's (with heaven knows how many thousand private collections, mostly unorganized and unknown), together provide a telling picture of the problems besetting the broadcast historian. Finding recordings of old radio programs is so far not particularly hard -- up to a point. They exist, but irregularly, spottily, and without either coordination or cataloguing. (The admirable exception is the University of Washington's KIRO-CBS collection of World War II news programs -- for which, be it noted, Milo Ryan's catalogue was seven years in preparation.) Who has what? Is "what" even in existence? Does, for example, a recording of the full broadcast day of December 7, 1941, exist anywhere? In network vaults -- perhaps. No one knows. Not even, so far as the student can learn, the networks.

Even when the recordings exist, who can get at them? When he can get at them, what does he really know about them that can come anywhere near matching what he can easily find out about almost any book or magazine article ever published? Many of the programs listed in this catalogue are for all practical purposes undated. In some cases dates can be found fairly easily, no doubt; in other cases not. Perhaps someone knows, somewhere. Some of the dates given here are approximate; some, even the approximations, are certainly wrong. Some talent identifications are missing. Some that are not missing are wrong. Identifying Archie Gardner's voice is easy -- if you have heard it before. Identifying Adolph Menjou's is not -- even if you have. And the number of people who have, and who are known to have (and whose memory is trustworthy), is small and diminishing daily. Not many people any more know for certain whether the "Calvin Coolidge" voice in one of Ed Murrow's "I Can Hear It Now" compilations is that of a president or that of an actor.

The preparation of this catalogue and, it is hoped, of others like it, will help -- to the extent they are without error and to the extent their errors are corrected. But some possibilities for error arise from catalogue construction itself. How do you spell Verree Teasdale if you have never seen it in print?

INTRODUCTION 3

In a sense most of the questions asked above are really caveats. This catalogue is the small beginning of an attempt to organize and make available for study a group of "classic" radio programs, more or less "representative" but inevitably hit-or-miss, and to provide the most basic information about them -- information we hope is mostly trustworthy but we fear is not even quite that. We shall be very grateful for corrections, for more and better information, and of course for suggestions about possible additions to the Michigan State collection.

- - - - -

It is suggested above that the Television and Radio Department at Michigan State University may be able, in some cases, to provide interested persons with copies of some of the programs. The suggestion is made with some hesitation because we are not sure what it will lead to; it is nevertheless made, because of course about our only reasonably practical method of making new acquisitions is that of exchange. But it has to be emphasized that we are not in the business. We are neither set up nor equipped to supply or to exchange on any regular basis. The collection itself, and the catalogue, are in the purest sense extra-curricular activities. We have no way even to charge for the cost of blank tape, and no way to charge for the labor of dubbing. Until we do see what the small circulation of this catalogue leads to, we can only handle inquiries on a catch-as-catch-can basis, and hope we make somewhat more friends than enemies. For the moment, at least, we are probably limited to swapping tape for tape. We can provide a half-hour recorded program in flat exchange for another of similar length. Where no program is available for exchange, we can probably provide a half-hour recorded program in exchange for a (new) blank half-hour tape, provided payment also is made directly to a student named by us, at regular student-labor rates, for the dubbing. Such things as packing and postage we will at first be able to ignore. We cannot, of course, loan out our tapes on any basis.

Naturally it is embarrassing to hedge about our gingerly proffered services with all these restrictions, petty and otherwise, especially since we should like nothing better than to see many of these programs in everybody's collection. And once more: This is a catalogue in the sense of a library catalogue, not in the sense of a Sears-Roebuck catalogue.

HOW TO USE THIS CATALOGUE

The catalogue is divided into three sections: 1. descriptive Program Listings, on white paper; 2. Artist Listings, on pink paper; 3. Program Title Listings, on blue paper. The three sections are paged separately, for convenience in expansion. The page numbering system varies; see below.

Tape Identification Numbers

Each tape is assigned a five-digit catalogue number: The first two digits indicate the program type; the last three are the serial number for each individual tape within the program classification. For example, the recording of two Dick Tracy episodes is on tape number 33-009. The 33 identifies it as "Thriller Drama"; the 009 is the serial number, which together with the program-type prefix shows the location of the tape in the storage cabinets (and in the white section of this catalogue).

A "Key to Program Classification", which shows the two-digit prefixes assigned to the various program types, will be found immediately preceding the program listings.

Program Listings (white)

This major section of the catalogue, which is arranged by tape number (not alphabetically by program title) provides the most complete information about the programs. (To locate a program in this section, if the tape number is not known, it is necessary first to consult the Program Title Listings on the blue pages.)

Page numbers are keyed to program classification numbers, and consist of four digits, of which the first two correspond to the program-type prefix. Comedy variety programs (tape numbers 11-001, 11-002, 11-003 etc.) are found on pages

11-01, 11-02 etc. The Dick Tracy tape (33-009) is on page 33-03.

The Descriptive Program Listings

Each listing is in two major parts: a "Main Heading" and a "Supplementary Description." See the next two pages for a guide to the listings and a sample listing.

A GUIDE TO COMPLETE PROGRAM LISTINGSMAIN HEADING

Title: Either the title of a single program or the title of a regular program series from which a single offering is presented.

Tape No: As catalogued in the Michigan State University collection. Please refer to this number when inquiring about tapes.

Date: Here is shown the actual or estimated date of broadcast of the program. In the case of anthologies, the broadcast date of the entire program is given rather than that of any of its segments.

Broadcast Identification: An attempt is made to indicate the station or network upon which the program was broadcast. In the case of continuing program series, information is given about the entire run of this program and the changes in network if appropriate.

Artist: The major artists are listed in this place. A more complete cast of characters is, if appropriate, listed in the Supplementary Description section.

SUPPLEMENTARY DESCRIPTION

Title: Found here are the individual titles of programs within a program series or, when necessary, titles of each program when more than one program is stored on the same reel.

Artist: A complete listing of all the identifiable voices on a program is given here.

Time: The approximate program length or length of the program segment is listed.

Notes: Here may be found a brief description of the program, some indication of the plot of a dramatic show, or a note explaining the importance of the program.

Artist Listings (pink)

This section provides a complete list of the identifiable voices in the collection, arranged alphabetically by last name of the performer, with program title and tape number.

Program Title Listings (blue)

As a means of quick reference, the blue section contains an alphabetical list of program titles, with the major artists and the tape numbers.

These pages should be consulted first in looking up a program by title; if fuller information is wanted, it can be found by locating the program by tape number in the white section.

Notes

Some tapes contain more than one program. Conversely, some programs are recorded on two or more tapes.

For much of the program information given here we are indebted to Harrison B. Summers' "Radio Programs Carried on National Networks 1926-1956", Ohio State University, 1958.

Unless otherwise noted, programs have been recorded on 7½ ips, full-track.
